Why Accountability Must be Renewed

Message from the President
Delegates to the 2005 Conference in Sydney will recall the initiative to instigate a research program on behalf of ASPG and that we would also support research being conducted by Ken Coghill at Monash University. This work has proceeded and resulted in two papers being presented to the Seventh Workshop of Parliamentary Scholars and Parliamentarians, Wroxford College, Oxfordshire in July 2006 on the subject of Professional Development Programmes for MPs, and the release of a Discussion Paper entitled ‘Why Accountability Must be Renewed’ which has received good media coverage and interest.

The paper has been written by a group of ten academics and former members of parliament and is seen very much as the start point for a broad ranging debate on this most important issue.

Discussion Paper on Reform of Government Accountability in Australia

How ministers can be made accountable
Simple, effective reforms
Updating the Prime Minister’s Guide

Background

Australian citizens are increasingly denied effective democratic control over action taken on their behalf by governments of all political persuasions at Commonwealth, State and Territory levels. Governments hold office only through the democratic electoral process and the powers that governments exercise are delegated democratic authority. Yet it appears to many much as if they enjoy the discredited divine right of kings. Information is denied, processes are manipulated and accountability is deliberately frustrated.

Ministerial accountability fails as governments seize and hold political advantage, putting partisan interests ahead of the democratic rights of citizens and their entitlement to be treated with integrity, dignity and respect.

Some ministers claim that they cannot be held personally responsible for the acts and omissions of others who are involved in the administration of their portfolios because they did not know when they should have known and those directly answerable to them did know but did not tell them. They are not told because of a culture that allows information be withheld so that the minister can say ‘I did not know’. Effectively, personal responsibility is denied. ‘Bad government is the inevitable result of a lack of accountability’¹ and fertile ground is prepared for corruption.

Freedom of Information legislation is stretched to breaking point as many governments resort to delay, manipulation and court processes to defer or preferably prevent access to public information that they believe may affect voter support. This information belongs to the public. It is their votes which empower the executive to act and their taxes that provide the resources that are then used both to create information and to deny its availability in the public domain.

Many ministers can evade answering parliamentary questions, and make a mockery of question time. They use debating artifices to at best ignore the question and at worst to turn requests for information into abusive, partisan attacks on political opponents.

The Senate, which until recently was a major instrument of accountability, has been quickly rendered impotent by the rare election of a Government majority that makes impotency possible.

This discussion paper canvasses a range of reforms and revisions affecting the accountability of ministers and governments to Parliament and the citizens. Government accountability would be cemented into law by a set of principles to be adopted through ordinary legislation in the first instance, but ultimately entrenched as part of the Constitution.

Complementing that, a series of modest but significant updates are suggested to the code applying to Commonwealth ministerial responsibility, published as ‘A Guide on Key Elements of Ministerial Responsibility’ by Prime Minister John Howard in 1998 (referred to as the ‘Guide’ in this paper). These build on the code and propose reforms to take account of experience of the Guide in action; developments in the operation of Australian Government and Parliament since 1998; and policies and practices in other jurisdictions.

The Guide is reproduced in part, with comments and suggested amendments intended to improve the operation and outcomes of ministerial responsibility. Collectively, the proposals we put forward offer the most comprehensive, considered and effective reforms yet made to rescue the accountability of government to Australian citizens, supporting those politicians, public servants and advisers who seek to uphold Australia’s democratic traditions with clear statements of the principles and practices required. We welcome debate and Reforms affecting the Executive

The principles of ministerial responsibility are not stated in formal, authoritative statutory documents. Incorporation of the fundamental principles of ministerial answerability in legislation would have enormous symbolic weight. We propose that the principles be adopted in a declaratory, non-justiciable legislative instrument, stating that ministers are answerable for all acts and omissions of persons and organisations acting under prerogative, legislative or contractual authority assigned to them. And that ministers are held personally culpable for their own acts and omissions and for those of their heads of department and their personal staff, and others in which they have participated or of which they were aware or should have been aware.

In determining whether a minister is personally culpable, ignorance of a matter does not excuse the acts of omissions of a minister where the minister should have known or should have ensured the matter was drawn to the minister’s personal attention. Without limiting the circumstances in which ministers should have known of any matter, they are deemed to have the knowledge of their heads of department and others who report directly to them and all members of their personal staff.

In discharging their responsibilities, ministers are obliged to respond to any questions or other matters raised in parliament by redirecting the question to the relevant minister; providing all relevant information; providing full explanations; taking any necessary remedial action; accepting personal culpability; or, resignation; as appropriate according to the circumstances of the case.

Ministers shall provide answers to Parliamentary Questions which are direct and relevant; and freedom of information (FOI) requires that there be expeditious access to public records in all but specified exceptional circumstances where the public interest requires non-disclosure (e.g. genuine risk to the administration of justice or to national security).

These principles should also be reflected in the Guide, which should be amended accordingly at the earliest possible opportunity. It is not necessary that updating of the Guide should await passage of the legislative instrument. However, a legislative instrument would add to the effectiveness of the Guide.

The establishment of a Parliamentary Standards Commissioner as proposed in this Discussion Paper would also greatly strengthen the effectiveness of the Guide.

Freedom of Information (FOI)

Important documentation has been shielded from disclosure by inappropriate use of the exemption for Cabinet documents under freedom of information legislation (FOI). This misuse has been possible because the present exemption for Cabinet documents is cast too widely. We propose therefore that it be amended in accordance with the principles below.

A crucial component of the convention of collective ministerial responsibility is the ‘confidentiality rule’. This provides that the deliberations and decisions of Cabinet must remain secret. Without such a rule, Cabinet unanimity would be impossible to uphold. Further, it is in the nature of collective deliberation that competing views will be put, issues argued, compromises struck, minds changed and individual ministerial submissions accepted or rejected. Were confidentiality not to attach to such discussion, the views expressed in Cabinet may not be as open as they should be. The quality of debate in Cabinet, therefore, would suffer and so could the decisions made by it.

For these reasons it is generally accepted that the deliberations of Cabinet should remain secret. Cabinet papers therefore are regarded as confidential. However, to say that Cabinet papers should remain private begs one important question. That is, which papers generated at the highest levels of Government are properly designated as Cabinet papers?

The short answer to this question is that only those papers whose release may undermine the unanimity of Cabinet or which may jeopardise fundamental matters of public interest such as the administration of justice and national security, must remain confidential. Documents recording Cabinet decisions should also be protected since the proper forum for the announcement of such decisions is the Parliament and the timing of their announcement is a matter for the government.

It follows that not every document that goes to Cabinet is deserving of protection from disclosure. It cannot be sufficient to exempt a document that it is merely passed across the Cabinet table. Rather, a document must be such as to disclose either the deliberations of the Cabinet or its decisions to qualify for exclusion. So, for example, an attachment to a Cabinet document providing factual or statistical information to assist in Cabinet decision-making should not be exempt. This is because such raw material cannot, by definition, disclose Cabinet’s deliberations.

We propose, therefore, that only the following classes of document should be capable of exemption under freedom of information legislation.

A document that has been prepared by a Minister, or his or her staff, for the specific purpose of submission for consideration by Cabinet.

A document the disclosure of which would involve the disclosure of any deliberation of the Cabinet.

A document the disclosure of which would involve unacceptable risk to the public interest on a specified ground (e.g. the administration of justice, national security).

It follows that a document will not be an exempt document if:

The document contains factual, statistical, technical or scientific, including social scientific, material prepared for the purpose of consideration by Cabinet in making its decisions, after the decision to which that material relates has been made.

The document is a document considered by the Cabinet but has not been prepared specifically for that purpose.

Any document which has entered the public domain.

FOI Administration

It has been remarked frequently that Government departments seek to avoid their obligation to disclose documents under freedom of information legislation on the grounds that a request for documents is voluminous either in relation to the resources required to fulfil the request or the quantity of documents sought. Further, applicants may frequently be discouraged from applying for documents because the charges for access are too great. Sometimes applicants are further deterred by the excessive delay involved in the processing of requests.
In order to deal with these matters we propose that the Ombudsman be given jurisdiction to review disputes in each of these areas. The Ombudsman should be authorised to mediate, investigate and report in disputes over the processing of voluminous requests at the request of either an applicant or an agency; over the level of charges imposed for processing freedom of information requests; and where an applicant complains that there has been an excessive delay in the processing of a request or where a request has not been processed within a designated statutory time limit.

Reforms to Parliament

The operations of parliament, especially each House in which the government has majority support, are severely biased in favour of the executive. The public interest and the right to know what in being done by government acting with the citizens’ democratic authority should prevail. Accordingly, we propose reforms whereby a Parliamentary Standards Commissioner (see Appendix for UK model) is appointed with ‘own motion’ powers to investigate any evidence reasonably suggesting that any member of parliament may have breached accepted standards of behaviour in his or her official capacity, including complaints of public falsehood, and report to the Parliament, with a recommendation that the matter be referred to the Privileges Committee if appropriate. Ministers are to be required to be directly responsive, relevant, succinct and limited to the subject matter of the question in answering Questions Without Notice. This requires reforms to Standing Orders (Rules of Procedure) and rulings by Presiding Officers. Conventions are established that Presiding Officers abandon participation in parliamentary party affairs and receive greater respect for the independence of their functions.3

Parliaments insist on their right as sovereign institutions to examine and investigate the actions of ministers’ personal staff and departmental officials; and Parliaments extend opportunities for public engagement in the scrutiny of parliamentary legislation and inquiries. Each House should consider whether to establish a bi/multi-partisan presidium (similar to that common in Europe) to control the business program (bills, motions, etc).

3 Rozzoli (forthcoming, 2006) proposes the election of each Presiding Officer (Speaker of the Lower House; President of the Upper House) for a term not exceeding eight years, with the election taking place between general elections. The Presiding Officer would serve in Parliament as a member-at-large representing a notional electorate and be ineligible to continue as, or become, a member of any registered political party. The vacancy on the floor of the House would be filled within twenty-eight days by a member from the same party. Any member nominated for office would be required to have completed at least three full terms in the parliament and have during such period served at least two years as either Chairman of Committees or Temporary Chairman of Committees. The Presiding Officer could be removed from office only by a two-thirds majority of all Members voting to that effect.
Parliamentary Standards Commissioner

A Parliamentary Standards Commissioner should be appointed as an Independent Officer of the Parliament (similarly to the Victorian Auditor General and Ombudsman). The Commissioner's main responsibilities would be overseeing the maintenance and monitoring the operation of the registers of members' and senators' interests. Providing advice to each House about the provisions of the Guide to the Key Elements of Ministerial Accountability (Guide) and any code of conduct adopted by either House (code), whether existing or recommended to be introduced. Monitoring the operation of the Guide and each code and, where appropriate, proposing possible modifications to the Parliament. Providing advice on a confidential basis to individual ministers, members and senators and to each House about the interpretation of the Guide and any code. Preparing guidance and providing training for ministers, members and senators on matters of conduct, propriety and ethics. Receiving and investigating complaints about ministers, members and senators who are allegedly in breach of the Guide and code. Investigating evidence of possible breaches of the Guide or code by ministers, members and senators, on the Commissioner’s own motion. Reporting to the Parliament, and thereby the public, upon compliance with the principles and spirit of the Guide and each code; any failure (whether wholly, partly or in spirit) to comply with the provisions of the Guide and code; the extent and seriousness of any failure to comply; the responsibility of any person for such failure; whether any matter should be referred to the Privileges Committee of the House of which the minister, member or senator is a member, or was at the time of the event(s) in question.

In exercising the functions of the office, the Commissioner shall have the privilege of the Parliament i.e. investigations will enjoy the authority of the House of which the minister, member or senator is a member and reports shall have parliamentary privilege. The Commissioner would be appointed on the recommendation of an all-party Parliamentary Committee.

Proposals for updating of the Guide to Key Elements of Ministerial Responsibility

Preface

In 1976, the Royal Commission on Australian Government Administration (the Coombs Commission) commented on the principles of Ministerial responsibility. It noted that

It is through ministers that the whole of the administration — departments, statutory bodies, and agencies of one kind and another — is responsible to the Parliament and thus, ultimately, to the people. Ministerial responsibility to the Parliament is a matter of constitutional convention rather than law. It is not tied to any authoritative text, or amenable to judicial interpretation or resolution. Because of its conventional character, the principles and values on which it rests may undergo change, and their very status as conventions be placed in doubt.\textsuperscript{5}

The Commission went on to state that the traditional conceptions of ministerial responsibility had been called into question in recent times and that

\begin{quote}
\ldots there is little evidence that a minister's responsibility is now seen as requiring him to bear the blame for all the faults and shortcomings of his public service subordinates, regardless of his own involvement, or to tender his resignation in every case where fault is found.\textsuperscript{6}
\end{quote}

It commented that

\begin{quote}
The evidence tends to suggest rather that while ministers continue to be held accountable to Parliament in the sense of being obliged to answer to it when Parliament so demands, and to indicate corrective action if that is called for, they themselves are not held culpable — and in consequence bound to resign or suffer dismissal — unless the action which stands condemned was theirs, or taken on their direction, or was action with which they ought obviously to have been concerned.\textsuperscript{7}
\end{quote}

The Coombs Commission recognised the realities of the increased range and complexity of government which ‘\ldots make it unreal to expect a minister of state to take an active part in the detailed administration of the affairs of his department.’\textsuperscript{8}

It expressed no opinions as to the appropriateness of the convention as described by it.

The Commission referred to the role of the personal staff of ministers and their relationship with departmental staff and other issues. It stated that ‘\ldots it is essential that the minister have full control over and responsibility for all members of his staff.’\textsuperscript{9}

Given the conventional nature of ministerial responsibility, it is important to have an authoritative, comprehensive and clear statement of its content, obligations and consequences.

In 1996 the Prime Minister published the Guide to Key Elements of Ministerial Responsibility. It was revised in 1998. It is a wide ranging statement of elements of ministerial responsibility and is the principal statement in Australia.

Recent events have brought into question the adequacy of the Guide. Concerns have been expressed about whether and to what extent a doctrine of ministerial responsibility still exists and, if so, what is its content. In particular, it appears that the Coombs’ proposition, that the convention imposes culpability for actions with which the Minister ought obviously to have been concerned, is denied. Further, oral statements reported earlier this year as made by the Head of the Department of Prime Minister and Cabinet, Dr Shergold, and the Prime Minister point to a government view that the personal culpability of ministers should be significantly limited.

Following an address to the National Press Club, Dr Shergold, in a Questions and Answer session, was asked when a minister should resign. He was reported as identifying two situations where a minister would be clearly responsible for failures within a department. One was where the minister was involved in a breach of the law. The other was where the minister had his or her attention drawn to matters and took no action.

A few weeks later, the Prime Minister was reported as saying, concepts of ministerial accountability mean that if you’re directly responsible for a wrongdoing, or if there has been a total systemic failure in your administration, then you have to accept responsibility for that.

On one interpretation, the Prime Minister was limiting both the circumstances in which ministers would be required to account for their failings, or those of their departments, and the circumstances in which ministers would be held personally culpable.

These recent statements, if accepted, would significantly limit the principles of ministerial responsibility as they have been understood and as discussed by the Coombs Commission. It cannot be said, however, that such statements conflict with the 1998 Guide because the Guide says little about the obligation to account for departmental failings and fails to address the issue of the personal culpability of a Minister.

Another important matter is the practice that Australian parliaments do not generally use their powers to compel the attendance of ministerial advisors as witnesses. In Australia it has come to be known as the ‘McMullan principle’, named after the Labor minister who ordered his personal staff not to appear or answer questions. His justification was that ‘ministerial staff are accountable to the minister and the minister is accountable to the parliament and, ultimately, to the electors’.

Accepting that in our political system it is the minister who will be held to account by the parliament not his or her personal staff, it does not follow that their staff should not be questioned by the parliament. To the contrary, it is critical to holding ministers to account that their personal staff be able to be questioned by the parliament.

It is our view that the 1998 Guide does not adequately address the definition of ministerial responsibility and the means by which ministers are to be made answerable for the discharge of that responsibility. It does not specifically address the circumstances in which ministers are to be held personally culpable for their acts and omissions and those of others in matters relevant to the ministers’ portfolio. These deficiencies leave considerable uncertainty which is undesirable from the community’s point of view and unsatisfactory for Ministers and the Parliament. The Guide does address the issue of the minister's responsibility for the acts and omissions of personal staff; but identifying that responsibility will have no effect as long as the convention exists that personal staff are not required to appear before parliamentary committees to answer questions. That weakness needs to be addressed. Other provisions need to be added and existing provisions strengthened to make governments accountable to parliament and the people.

What is need is a restatement of the Guide. Such an important document should be the subject of public comment and debate.

To facilitate comment and debate we have set out a modified version of the Guide on the following pages. It attempts to address what we see as the deficiencies.

Guide to Key Elements of Ministerial Responsibility

Amendments to the 1998 Guide are shown in bold and discussed in text boxes

Foreword

This Guide is the authoritative source of information and advice for ministers, parliamentary secretaries and ministerial staff. It sets out in summary form the main principles, conventions and rules by which government and ministerial conduct at the Commonwealth level is governed. The objective of ministerial responsibility is improved standards of behaviour in the discharge of ministers’ assigned responsibilities.

The Guide has been updated to:

- clearly identify the exercise of executive powers in the public interest for which ministers and parliamentary secretaries are responsible; confirm that ministers are answerable for the conduct of all staff under their authority, including ministerial staff; indicate the manner in which ministers and parliamentary secretaries are answerable for the exercise of their responsibilities; address the issue of the personal culpability of ministers; clarify the implication of Parliament’s role as Australia’s supreme democratic institution including the government’s relationship with it; and incorporate minor editorial changes.

The Guide does not seek to provide answers to questions of detail. It does, however, refer where necessary to other handbooks and guidelines which provide more comprehensive information.

1. The Constitutional and Legal Framework

Distribution of Powers

The framework for Australian government is set out in the Constitution, with Commonwealth functions separated broadly into legislative, judicial and executive. Executive power is vested primarily in the Governor-General acting with the advice of the Federal Executive Council.

Constitutional convention requires the Governor-General to act in accordance with the advice of the Prime Minister. In accordance with this convention, executive powers are actually exercised by the Prime Minister, ministers and parliamentary secretaries.

The Constitution provides that all ministers are Executive Councillors and the practice has been to appoint all parliamentary secretaries to the Council as well.

All ministers and parliamentary secretaries must be members of Parliament. As members of Parliament, ministers also take part in the exercise of legislative power, including in the introduction of proposed legislation to Parliament for consideration.

The Prime Minister, ministers and parliamentary secretaries are all answerable to Parliament for the discharge of their individual responsibilities and the collective responsibilities of the Government.

Ministers and Departments

Acting on the advice of the Prime Minister, the Governor-General appoints ministers Acting on the advice of the Prime Minister, the Governor-General also establishes departments, then formally allocates executive responsibility among ministers through the Administrative Arrangements Order published in the Commonwealth Gazette. The Order specifies the matters dealt with by each department of state and the legislation administered by each minister of state administering a department. In accordance with the Administrative Arrangements Order, most of the general executive powers of the Commonwealth are exercised by ministers or their departments without the direct involvement of the Governor-General or Executive Council. Many enactments also vest decision-making powers directly in ministers. However, some important powers, such as regulation-making and many appointments, are vested in the Governor-General in Council.

Cabinet

While not mentioned in the Constitution, Cabinet is the central organ for collective consideration of issues by ministers. Although the recorded outcomes of Cabinet discussions are often referred to as decisions, the holder of legal authority to make the decision is often the Executive Council, an individual minister or an official with specific statutory powers.

Parliament

Under the Australian system of representative government, ministers are answerable to Parliament for the discharge of their responsibilities.

Ministers accept three major responsibilities: for the overall administration of their portfolios, both in terms of policy and management; for carriage in the Parliament of their accountability obligations to that institution; and collectively for the policies and exercise of responsibility by fellow ministers.

This requires ministers to be answerable to Parliament for every action of public servants, personal staff and other personnel acting under the minister’s prerogative, legislative or contractual authority. In all cases, whether an action occurred with or without the minister’s authorisation or knowledge, the minister remains liable to answer for that action and any corrective action.

Similarly, ministers share collective responsibility for the actions of all other ministers, whether or not those actions have been the subject of Cabinet or other collective deliberation.
It is a condition of appointment as minister or parliamentary secretary that the appointees accept restrictions on employment after ceasing to hold appointment (see 13. Post Ministerial or Parliamentary Secretary Career).

2. The Ministry

Portfolio Ministers

Some ministerial portfolios have only one minister. In other cases, however, to enhance ministerial control over complex and diverse functions, more than one minister administers a portfolio. In those cases the Prime Minister will determine the minister who is to have ultimate responsibility for the portfolio (the portfolio minister).

The portfolio minister, subject to any general views of the Prime Minister, determines the matters that will be the responsibility of any other minister in the portfolio. The portfolio minister is, subject to Cabinet, responsible for the direction of policy and the public presentation of it.

The portfolio minister represents the interests of the portfolio in Cabinet, but other ministers in the portfolio are entitled to bring forward submissions related to their allocated areas of responsibility; and to be present when Cabinet discusses those submissions. The principles of collective responsibility set out in the Cabinet Handbook apply. In summary, they are: decisions of Cabinet are reached collectively and, other than in exceptional circumstances, bind all ministers as decisions of the government. In exceptional cases ministers who were not present for a discussion may, if they believe there are difficulties of which Cabinet would have been unaware, seek to re-open discussion; all ministers must give their support in public debate to decisions of the government; and ministers are expected to refrain from public comment on Cabinet committee decisions which are not operative until endorsed by the full Cabinet.

In the Parliament the portfolio minister is ultimately accountable for the overall operation of his/her portfolio. Other ministers in the portfolio, however, also have a clear accountability for areas of responsibility allocated to them and are required to answer questions (as discussed under ‘Questions’) in relation to those areas; and with the agreement of the portfolio minister concerned, other ministers in the portfolio may also, in relation to the whole portfolio, take legislation through, and respond to Matters of Public Importance motions.

The Prime Minister sets out his priorities and strategic direction for each portfolio in a letter sent to respective ministers shortly after they are appointed. This letter may also indicate in broad terms how the Prime Minister sees functions being shared by ministers in the portfolio.

Parliamentary Secretaries

Parliamentary secretaries may also be appointed to help particular ministers deal with the heavy workload in a portfolio. They are not appointed under the Constitution to administer departments as ministers are, and do not answer parliamentary questions or represent ministers at Senate estimates hearings.

The duties parliamentary secretaries may undertake are allocated following consideration and discussion with the respective portfolio ministers. The duties carried out by a parliamentary secretary may include policy development work in nominated areas of the portfolio; considering and signing replies to correspondence as appropriate; carriage of legislation in the Parliament; chamber duty; representing the minister at official engagements; and attending Executive Council meetings in accordance with arrangements coordinated by the Executive Council secretariat.

3. Cabinet

Cabinet Handbook

The following is a general description of Cabinet and its procedures. More detailed information is set out in the Cabinet Handbook issued from time to time by the Prime Minister and available from the Cabinet Secretariat.

Composition

It is the Prime Minister who decides on the size of the Cabinet and who determines which ministers are to be included in the Cabinet.

Collective Responsibility

The principle of collective responsibility for the decisions which are taken in Cabinet is fundamental to effective Cabinet government. From this principle flows the convention that what is discussed in Cabinet and in particular, the views of individual ministers on issues before the Cabinet, are to remain entirely within the confidence of the members of Cabinet.

Similarly, the papers considered by Cabinet and the minutes recording the outcome of the Cabinet’s deliberations are regarded as confidential.

The contrived submission of documents to Cabinet with the aim of keeping them away from public view has become all-too-common. This artificial procedure gives any document the status of a Cabinet Document and aims to exclude politically sensitive documents, which would not otherwise come to Cabinet, from provisions of Freedom of Information legislation. This is now a serious impediment to the public’s right to know and the accountability of ministers for the discharge of executive powers. This addition makes it clear that such actions are not acceptable.
to the government of the day. Separate procedures apply to the handling of Cabinet documents and the convention has been adopted by successive governments that the Cabinet papers (and deliberative documents generally) of a government are not available to its successors.

Papers are to be brought before Cabinet only when genuinely related to Cabinet deliberations and not as a pretext for giving them such status.

\textit{Declaration of Interests}

Ministers are required to resign directorships in public companies.

A minister attending Cabinet or a Cabinet committee meeting must, in relation to the matters under discussion, \textit{take all reasonable steps to identify and declare any potential relevant beneficial} private interests held by them, or members of their immediate family, or association with a political party, or donor to a political party, or sponsor of a political activity or campaign, of which they are aware, which give rise to, or are likely to give rise to, a conflict with their public duties. Generally, declarations should be made in all cases where an interest exists which could not be said to be shared with the rest of the community. Any such declarations will be recorded by Cabinet officers. It is then open to the meeting to excuse a minister from the discussion or to agree explicitly to his or her taking part.

Once a minister has made Cabinet aware of a particular private interest, it will not normally be necessary to declare that interest in subsequent Cabinet discussions. If a significant time has elapsed since a declaration and the interest is one that might not be well known to colleagues, the minister might declare the interest again when the relevant matter is under discussion.

Ministers’ responsibilities in relation to their private interests are discussed in more detail in Chapter 5.

These provisions have failed to keep pace with developments which could undermine the integrity of the exercise of executive powers.
Also, they were watered down in 1998 following the resignations of several ministers found to have breached the 1996 provisions affecting company directorships.
The potential for corruption of the exercise of ministerial discretion has dramatically increased with the greatly expanded use of privatised services, public-private partnerships and other arrangements. Ministers individually and Cabinet collectively make decisions and influence public service actions with massive consequences for powerful commercial interests with the \textit{ability} to make generous donations to support political campaigns.

Similarly, Ministers and Cabinet may make decisions with major implications for the interests of their own or another political party. Whilst partisan considerations are intrinsic to the operation of the political system, these partisan interests must not pre-dominate over the public interest.

Requiring ministers to inform themselves and their colleagues on a comprehensive range of potential conflicts of interest would strengthen protections against corruption in the exercise of executive powers.

These amendments also restore the 1996 requirements concerning company directorships.
Committees

It is usual for the Prime Minister to establish a number of committees of the Cabinet. Committees are commonly used for dealing with especially sensitive issues (for example, security and revenue; for testing potentially controversial developments where discussion in full Cabinet would be premature; for dealing with matters where there is a lot of detail to be dealt with (economic statements or budget outlays are an example); and where matters are relatively routine (for example the approval of the weekly government business programme by a Parliamentary Business Committee).

Meetings and Attendance by Ministers

The Cabinet and its committees meet as and when required, consistent with the Prime Minister’s wishes. Generally, Cabinet meets on a weekly basis and committees meet less frequently but may undertake periods of increased activity (for example in the preparation of the Budget or major policy statements).

Subject to unavoidable parliamentary or Executive Council commitments, attendance at meetings of the Cabinet or its committees takes priority over all other engagements and the Prime Minister should be informed if for any reason a minister is unable to attend.

Business

Business comes before the Cabinet primarily by way of submissions and memorandums, but also as a result of correspondence to the Prime Minister.

Decisions on whether an item should be considered in Cabinet and what business should be considered at a particular meeting are taken by the Prime Minister.

Submissions are papers containing recommendations by the responsible minister(s) on action to be taken by the government. Departments will normally provide drafts of submissions for their ministers’ consideration. Memorandums are submitted by departments to Cabinet for its information and do not include recommendations. Other matters may be brought forward only with the agreement of the Prime Minister and the general practice is for ministers to write to the Prime Minister explaining that the matter is urgent and is sufficiently straight-forward not to need the preparation of a Cabinet submission.

Appointments

Appointments are also brought to the Cabinet by way of correspondence from the responsible minister to the Prime Minister following current Australian practice has not kept pace with improvements to appointment processes made in comparable countries such as the United Kingdom, where the Public Appointments Unit is responsible for appointments first being scrutinised by an independent panel or by a group including membership independent of the department filling the post.
consideration of potential appointees and report by the (proposed) Appointments Commission comprised of senior public servants. No recommendation to Cabinet for an appointment will be accepted unless it has been scrutinised by an independent panel or by a group including membership independent of the department filling the post authorised by the Appointments Commission or is certified by the Prime Minister as an urgent appointment, giving the reasons and qualifications for selection, published in the Government Gazette.

Business Rules

Various rules for the handling of business are determined by the Prime Minister and are set out in detail in the Cabinet Handbook. These relate to matters such as the content and presentation of papers for Cabinet, requirements for consultation with other ministers and their departments and deadlines for the lodgement of submissions in advance of meetings to ensure that ministers have sufficient opportunity to familiarise themselves with their content.

Minutes

Cabinet officials take notes of the discussions that take place in Cabinet and its committees and produce minutes recording the outcome of those discussions. The minutes indicate the matters to which the Cabinet has agreed and the significant matters it has noted. They do not record the general arguments expressed or the views of individual ministers. Cabinet minutes are generally issued to all Cabinet ministers although there are some which are given a more limited distribution.

Committee Minutes

The general practice is for minutes of committees (other than those of either a particularly sensitive or routine nature) to be submitted for endorsement at a later meeting of the Cabinet before they are accorded any final authority. Ministers not involved in a committee’s deliberations who wish to address issues raised by the committee’s decision in the Cabinet should give prior notice to the Prime Minister.

Cabinet Policy Unit

The Cabinet Policy Unit provides the Prime Minister with advice on issues before the Cabinet and on the strategic policy directions of the government. Staff are employed under the Members of Parliament (Staff) Act 1984 and are accountable directly to the Prime Minister. The head of the Cabinet Policy Unit is the Secretary to Cabinet.
4. Executive Council

Constitutional Background

Section 62 of the Constitution provides that:

There shall be a Federal Executive Council to advise the Governor-General in the government of the Commonwealth, and the members of the Council shall be chosen and summoned by the Governor-General and sworn as Executive Councillors, and shall hold office during his pleasure.

By virtue of section 63 of the Constitution, the Council is involved whenever the Constitution vests a power in the ‘Governor-General in Council’. The Council is also involved whenever legislation vests a power in the Governor-General.

Purpose

The purpose of the Council is to provide the forum through which ministerial advice is provided to the Governor-General in the exercise of his powers.

The business undertaken by the Executive Council includes: the making of proclamations (notice given under an Act by the Governor-General of a particular matter such as the commencement of the Act on a specified day); the making of regulations and ordinances (under delegated authority under an Act): the making and terminating of appointment to statutory offices, boards, commissions, courts and tribunals; changes to the Administrative Arrangements Order, including the creation and abolition of government departments (Constitution section 64); the issuing of writs for the election of members of the House of Representatives (Constitution, sections 32 and 33), and senators for the territories (Commonwealth Electoral Act 1918, section 151); the authorisation of Australian entry into international treaties; and the commissioning of officers in the Defence Force and termination of those commissions.

Composition

All ministers, and in recent years all parliamentary secretaries, are sworn in as Executive Councillors. Executive Councillors maintain that capacity for life although only Councillors who are ministers or parliamentary secretaries in the government of the day are summoned to attend council meetings

Vice President

A member of the ministry is appointed by the Governor-General to be Vice President of the Executive Council. The Vice President may from time to time be required to preside at Executive Council meetings.
Meetings

Meetings of the Executive Council are held as required and at the Governor-General’s convenience. Generally there is a meeting about every fortnight but where the need arises special meetings can be arranged at short notice.

The established practice is that two Executive Councillors are required to attend the meeting to provide a quorum. The meetings are generally presided over by the Governor-General, or in his absence, for example overseas, by the Administrator of the Government of the Commonwealth. In urgent circumstances, with the Governor-General’s concurrence, a meeting may be presided over by the Vice President or, if he or she is unavailable, by the most senior minister available. Again, two Executive Councillors are also present to constitute a quorum.

Meetings are generally held at Government House, although they may be held elsewhere, (for example at Admiralty House in Sydney) if the circumstances require.

Attendance by Ministers and Parliamentary Secretaries

All ministers (both within Cabinet and in the outer ministry) and also parliamentary secretaries are required to make themselves readily available on request to attend meetings of the Executive Council. A roster is generally developed for attendance at the more regular meetings. Where a special meeting is urgently required the onus falls on the minister seeking the meeting to arrange attendance by Councillors.

Papers

Papers for Council meetings are prepared by departments. The Secretary to the Council, who is an officer of the Department of the Prime Minister and Cabinet, circulates them in advance to those attending the meeting.

The Governor-General may seek assurance from the Councillors attending that the recommendations being made are appropriate. Ministers and parliamentary secretaries should therefore familiarise themselves with the general nature of the matters being considered. Often questions requiring more detailed knowledge will be dealt with by the Secretary to the Executive Council, who may undertake to obtain further information for the Governor-General.

The practice at Executive Council meetings is for the Governor-General to refer to each of the matters raised and to seek the assurances of the Councillors attending that he should proceed on the recommendations that are in the papers. The Councillors both sign a schedule confirming this advice and the Governor-General signs the schedule indicating his approval of the advice received.
Announcement of Decisions before Executive Council Meetings

Matters coming before the Council, particularly appointments, should not be announced in advance of the Council’s meeting. In exceptional cases where it is considered imperative for there to be early announcement, the Governor-General’s agreement would be sought by the Secretary to the Executive Council. Early announcements should always make it clear that what the minister is announcing is his/her intention to recommend the proposed action to the Governor-General

Further Information

Further information is included in the Executive Council Handbook available from the Cabinet Secretariat.

5. Ministerial Conduct

It is vital that ministers and parliamentary secretaries do not by their conduct undermine public confidence in them or the government.

Ministers must be honest in their public dealings and should not intentionally mislead the Parliament or the public. Any misconception caused inadvertently should be corrected at the earliest opportunity.

Ministers should ensure that their conduct is defensible, and should consult the Prime Minister when in doubt about the propriety of any course of action.

Along with the privilege of serving as a minister or parliamentary secretary there is some personal sacrifice in terms of the time and energy that must be devoted to official duties and some loss of privacy. Although their public lives encroach upon their private lives, it is important that ministers and parliamentary secretaries avoid giving any appearance of using public office for private purposes.

The nature of their duties is such that they may need to have regard to the interests of members of their immediate families (to the extent that ministers know their interests) as well as their own when ensuring that no conflict or apparent conflict between interests and duties arises.

Ministers (this and subsequent references to ministers should be read as including parliamentary secretaries) must not engage in any professional practice or in the daily work of any business. They must not accept retainers or income from personal exertion other than that laid down as their remuneration as ministers and parliamentarians. Notes on the meaning of ‘personal exertion’ are included in the explanatory notes which the Prime Minister sends out with statements of interests forms.

Ministers are required to resign directorships in public companies and may retain directorships in private companies only if any such company operates, for example, a family farm, business or portfolio of investments, and if retention of the directorship is not likely to conflict with the minister’s public duty (e.g., a minister should question the retention of a directorship in a company in which share holdings extend beyond the minister’s own family).

Ministers are required to divest themselves, or relinquish control, of all shares and similar interests in any company or business involved in the area of their portfolio responsibilities. The transfer of interests to a spouse or dependent family member, or to a nominee or trust, is not an acceptable form of divestment. Ministers may transfer control to an outside professional nominee or trust providing the minister or immediate family exercises no control on the operation of the nominee or trust.

Ministers are not precluded from making investments on the stock markets or other financial and trading markets, but they should not operate as traders and should exercise careful personal judgment in respect of transactions.

Ministers are required to make statements of interests in accordance with arrangements determined by the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister writes to ministers outlining these arrangements.

Ministers should perform their public duties not influenced by fear or favour — that is, by any expectation that they or their political party or any donor to a political party or campaign will benefit or suffer as a consequence.

Ministers should not accept any benefit where acceptance might give an appearance that they may be subject to improper influence (e.g. because the giver has or seeks to have a contractual relationship with government or has any other special interest in government decisions).

Ministers may accept benefits in the form of gifts, sponsored travel or hospitality only in accordance with the relevant guidelines (provided by the Prime Minister when he writes to ministers about their statements of interests).

All gifts, sponsored travel or hospitality with an estimated value of more than $50 must be disclosed through updating of statements of private interests within 28 days of receipt.
Ministers should not exercise the influence obtained from their public office, or use official information, to gain any improper benefit for themselves or their political party or any donor to a political party or campaign or another person or organisation.

Particular attention needs to be paid to ensuring that the scope for adverse comment is minimised if it is proposed to appoint someone who is the close relative or associate of a minister.

Subject to provisions in legislation or other formal documents relating to the establishment of government bodies or positions, government appointments are to be made following consideration of potential appointees and report by the (proposed) Appointments Commission.

If the approving authority (which may be Cabinet or a minister) is satisfied that this condition is demonstrably met, then spouses, parents, children or other close relatives of ministers, parliamentarians, ministerial staff or heads of departments or agencies should not be discriminated against in selection processes on account of family relationships.

There is a longstanding practice that ministers do not appoint close relatives to positions in their own offices. In addition, close relatives of a minister should not be appointed to any other minister’s office irrespective of the level of the position, except with the specific approval of the Prime Minister. And a minister’s close relative should not be appointed to any position in an agency in that minister’s own portfolio if the appointment is subject to the agreement of the minister or Cabinet.

Appointment proposals should identify the elements of merit, skills, qualifications, experience and special qualities on which they are based.

Ministers are provided with facilities at public expense in order that public business may be conducted effectively. Their use of these facilities should be in accordance with this principle. It should not be wasteful or extravagant. As a general rule, official facilities should be used for official purposes. The distinction between official and personal conduct is not always clear (e.g., in relation to the provision of hospitality/entertainment and use of car transport) but ministers should ensure that their actions are calculated to give the public value for its money and never abuse the privileges which, undoubtedly, are attached to ministerial office.

Contact with Lobbyists

Ministers and parliamentary secretaries will be approached by individuals and organisations, acting on their own behalf or on behalf of others, whose purpose is to seek to influence (lobby) government on a variety of issues.
Ministers and parliamentary secretaries should ensure that dealings with lobbyists are conducted so that they do not give rise to a conflict between public duty and private interest.

In dealing with a lobbyist who is acting on behalf of a third party, it is important to establish who or what company or what interests that lobbyist represents so that informed judgements can be made about the outcome they are seeking to achieve.

Where representations are being made on behalf of a foreign government or the agency of a foreign government, special care needs to be exercised as foreign policy or national security considerations may apply. It may be appropriate in certain cases to advise the office of the Minister for Foreign Affairs of representations received.

6. Ministers’ Relations with Departments

The Australian Public Service (APS) exists to provide advice to the government, and give effect to its policies. The Service is based on a number of important principles, including: high standards of honesty, integrity and conduct; equitable service to the public; provision of frank and comprehensive advice to ministers; a strong emphasis on responsiveness to the government, the Parliament and the community; party-political impartiality; and staffing based on merit.

It is important that there be trust between ministers and public servants, and each must contribute to the establishment and maintenance of the trust. Ministers should be scrupulous in avoiding asking public servants to do anything that the APS principles do not permit, and in particular should not ask them to engage in activities which could call into question their political impartiality.

Ministers will obtain advice from a range of sources, but primarily from their private office and from their departments. There is clearly no obligation on ministers to accept advice put to them by public servants, but it is important that advice be considered carefully and fairly. It is not for public servants to continue to press their advice beyond the point where their ministers have indicated that the advice, having been fully considered, is not the favoured approach. Public servants should feel free, however, to raise issues for reconsideration if they believe there are emerging problems or additional information that warrant fresh examination.

The current Guide is seriously flawed in that it understates the nature and extent of the accountability which ministers must accept for the discharge of their responsibilities if parliamentary democracy is to have real meaning.

This wording recognises that only ministers can answer to Parliament and the citizens for the exercise of executive power, whether exercised directly or through private office staff, agencies, contracted organisations and legislation for which ministers are assigned responsibility.

The importance of ministerial responsibility for their ministerial staff was reinforced by the recent Canadian Gomery Report which stated that

(1)The notion that (2 named staff) could provide political input without strongly influencing the decision-making process is nonsense and ignores the obvious reality that the expression of an opinion to a subordinate official by the (minister’s) Chief of Staff or the Minister amounts to an order

(Note that Canada has reformed political donations, banning all donations by corporations and limiting donations by individuals to C$5,000; a current bill proposes to reduce that to C$1000.)

However, as indicated below, the manner in which accountability operates does not provide that ministerial resignation is the sole manner in which it can be discharged.
Accountability

The secretary of a department is, pursuant to the Public Service Act, responsible ‘under the minister’ for the general working of the department and for advising the minister in all matters relating to the department.

Ministers bear two major individual responsibilities: first for the overall administration of their portfolios, both in terms of policy and management; and secondly for carriage in the Parliament of their accountability obligations to that institution. This requires ministers to be answerable to Parliament for every action of public servants, personal staff and other personnel acting under the minister’s prerogative, legislative or contractual authority. In all cases, whether an action occurred with or without the minister’s authorisation or knowledge, the minister remains liable to answer for that action and any corrective action.

Ministers’ direct responsibility for actions of their personal staff is, of necessity, greater than it is for their departments’. Ministers have closer day-to-day contact with, and direction of the work of, members of their staff. Furthermore, the actions of ministerial staff are not reported in departmental annual reports, and they are not normally subject to other forms of external scrutiny, such as administrative tribunals. However, the parliament is empowered to require them to give evidence to parliamentary committees.

Ministerial staff provide important links between ministers and departments when the minister is unable to deal with departmental staff personally, and add essential political dimensions to advice coming to ministers. A close and productive relationship between a minister’s staff and the department maximises the minister’s effectiveness. Ultimately, however, ministers cannot delegate to members of their personal staff their constitutional, legal or accountability responsibilities. Ministers therefore need to make careful judgements about the extent to which they authorise staff to act on their behalf in dealings with departments.

Discharge of Accountability

Ministers may discharge their responsibility to be accountable at one or more of six levels. The appropriate level of accountability will vary according to circumstances and judgements related to the details of each case.

There are six accountability levels which may be summarised as: redirecting the question to

The current Guide is silent on how a minister may demonstrate accountability for an event which has occurred or a decision that has been taken within an area for which he or she is assigned responsibility. The levels at which ministers discharge their responsibilities have been clearly identified by British scholar, Diana Woodhouse. These are adapted here.
the relevant minister; providing all relevant information; providing full explanations; taking any necessary remedial action; accepting personal culpability; or, resignation.

Redirecting the question applies where the matter falls outside the minister’s responsibility and is redirected to the ministerial colleague, other government or non-government entity with responsibility.

Providing all relevant information occurs when the only requirement is for the minister to provide some factual information concerning a matter within an area for which he or she has responsibility.

Providing full explanations is where, in order to discharge responsibility, a minister provides an explanation of the events or actions taken but where no corrective or remedial action is required.

Taking any necessary remedial action concerns instances where some action was or is required in response to events which have occurred, or decisions have been taken by the minister or any subordinate, which require some corrective or remedial action.

Ministers are expected to accept personal culpability for their own acts and omissions and for those of their heads of department and their personal staff, and others in which they have participated or of which they were aware or should have been aware.

In determining whether a minister is personally culpable, ignorance of a matter does not excuse the acts or omissions of the minister where the minister should have known or should have ensured the matter was drawn to the minister’s personal attention. Without limiting the circumstances in which ministers should have known of any matter, they are deemed to have the knowledge of their heads of department and others who report directly to them and all members of their personal staff.

Resignation occurs where a minister has lost self-confidence or lost the confidence of the Prime Minister in the minister’s capacity to satisfactorily discharge the responsibilities of the office. In the rare event that a minister declines to act on advice to resign, the Prime Minister may recommend to the Governor-General that the minister’s commission be withdrawn, after which the minister ceases to hold office.

Departmental Secretaries

Under the Public Service Act 1999, departmental secretaries are appointed by the Prime Minister.

Ministers and departmental secretaries have complementary roles. The strength of the relationship between minister and head of department, in terms of clarity of understanding of the minister’s priorities and the free exchange of ideas, can be a significant factor in the achievement of portfolio goals. It is therefore incumbent upon both to maximise the opportunities that flow from productive working arrangements and that the minister ensures that he or she bears no responsibility for any failure to sustain those arrangements.

Secretaries are appointed for fixed terms, usually five years. They are eligible for re-appointment or for appointment to another position of secretary, but all appointments and re-appointments and their associated terms and conditions are entirely at the discretion of the government. The government is able to terminate a secretary’s appointment before the expiry of the term, but this step would not be taken lightly as termination involves formal action by the Prime Minister under the Public Service Act and the payment of compensation.

Senior Executive Service (SES)

Recruitment to and within the SES is merit-based. The Public Service Commissioner makes all SES appointments after receiving recommendations of the departmental secretary, who in turn receives reports from a selection advisory committee. These procedures are designed to protect the merit principle and the ongoing political impartiality of the senior ranks of the APS.

Public Engagement

Responsiveness is at the core of democratic government. Involvement of the public not only respects their rights as citizens to influence decisions affecting their lives, consultation frequently leads to improved policy, legislation and administration. It taps into knowledge that agencies can rarely capture to the same depth. Accordingly, it is important that ministers and parliamentary secretaries seek opportunities for public engagement in the scrutiny of executive actions wherever possible.
7. Administrative Decision-Making by Ministers

Background

Ministers may have to account for the exercise of their administrative powers, not only to Parliament (or its committees) and the Auditor-General, but also at law. The courts may review the legality of administrative decisions or actions taken by ministers. Some decisions can be reviewed on the merits by tribunals. The Ombudsman and the Auditor-General, while excluded from investigating the merits of government policy, may investigate a minister’s own actions and the adequacy of advice on which that action is based.

Review of decisions can be initiated by individuals or organisations whose interests are affected, including by ‘special interest’ groups. Many decisions will have sufficient commercial, environmental or other consequences to make such challenges likely if there is any doubt about the soundness of the decision-making process or the decision itself. Any legal challenge can have acute implications in terms of lost opportunities, delay and additional cost. Adverse decisions by courts also often give rise to public criticism.

Statutory Decision-Making by Ministers

The grounds for challenging administrative decisions made under legislation are set out comprehensively in the Administrative Decisions (Judicial Review) Act 1977. They give a clear indication of the basic requirements for decision-making. In essence each decision needs to be within the scope of the power provided by the legislation; the procedure for reaching the decision needs to meet basic standards of fairness, allowing all sides to present their cases, and must also comply with any special requirements set by the legislation; each decision needs to be made on the merits of the case, with the decision-maker unbiased and acting in good faith; and conclusions must be soundly based in reason, in particular they must reflect a proper understanding of the law, draw on reasonable evidence for findings of fact, take account of all relevant considerations and not take account of irrelevant considerations.

Ministers clearly need to have careful regard to the legalities of each decision, with recourse to professional legal advice where appropriate. It may not be sufficient to adopt the same approach as has been adopted in the past — changing circumstances may lead to challenges affecting processes which have previously gone uncontested. The process for making complex or sensitive decisions needs to allow plenty of time for due process including proper consultation — starting too late may lead to pressure for shortcuts which involve legal risk. The decision-making process needs to be carefully documented to allow for statements of reasons to be prepared or for the defence of a decision on review. All relevant documentation may need to be disclosed in the course of review processes, or in some cases in response to requests under the Freedom of Information Act 1982. Although government policy can be, and often is, an important factor considered in making statutory decisions, it is important to recognise that policy does not of itself have the force of law. Should there be any inconsistency between the application of the policy and the legal requirements for making the decision, the legal requirements prevail.

Delegation of Statutory Powers

Many statutory powers vested primarily in ministers may be delegated to departmental officers or others. While the delegate will take direct responsibility for individual decisions taken under delegated power, the minister retains ultimate responsibility for the operation of the Act and remains liable to be held to account for the overall adequacy of the decision-making arrangements, the achievement of acceptable standards and any corrective action. A minister who has issued a delegation may still exercise the power personally in appropriate cases, but cannot dictate the outcome where a decision is made by a delegate.

Ministers should consider carefully the structure of proposed delegations, the level to which particular functions are to be devolved and the general arrangements for ensuring delegates are equipped to perform the task. Any classes of decision to be handled at particularly senior level, or by the minister personally, should be identified. In some cases there may be scope for general guidance to delegates in the form of policy statements or guidelines provided they are consistent with the legislative scheme. A minister must ensure that he or she is to be notified promptly of decisions made under delegation and other significant events, and that a perm-manent record is maintained. This is particularly important where the decision could attract public comment to which the minister might be expected to respond.

Non-Statutory Decisions

While the paragraphs above deal specifically with decisions made under legislation, non-statutory decisions, such as a decision under the executive power to award a contract on behalf of the Commonwealth following a tender process, may also be subject to legal challenge. As with statutory decisions, care should be taken to ensure the decision-making process and the decision made are sound in law.
Ministers should seek professional legal assistance about the decision-making process and ensure adequate time is allowed for all necessary steps.

Policy Changes

A minister’s role in administering portfolio legislation includes development of proposals for policy change. This may involve proposing amendments to portfolio legislation. Notwithstanding proposals for legislative change, administrative powers need to be exercised on the basis of the existing legislation until the proposed change becomes law.

Further Information

Further information on the particular decision-making functions in each portfolio and their legal framework is available from each department. Legal advice on the application of administrative law requirements to particular decisions can also be obtained through the department, with the Attorney-General’s Department or external legal advisers involved as appropriate.

8. Facilities and Services for Ministers

Ministers are provided with support primarily from five sources: Ministerial within the Department of Finance and Administration, their own portfolio department, the Parliamentary Departments and the Protective Security Coordination Centre. The division of responsibility for services is described below.

Department of Finance and Administration — Ministerial Services Group

Ministerial Services (MS) has responsibility for payment of the ministerial salary component (the senator or member’s salary component is paid by the relevant parliamentary department); payment of travelling allowance; the provision of all travel within Australia by the minister, staff, spouse or nominee and dependent children; the cost of a private plated vehicle in the minister’s electorate. The cost of the minister’s official overseas visits including personal staff and spouse (but excluding departmental staff and hospitality of a personal nature); additional ministerial office accommodation — either in the capital city or the electorate; the minister’s information delivery service entitlement (formerly postage entitlement) as a senator or member; management of office accommodation in the ministerial wing of Parliament House including parking in the basement car park. The supply of standard furniture and equipment in the ministerial wing; authorisation of the removal of any equipment from the ministerial wing; security policy within the ministerial wing; provision and maintenance of the secure communications network (ministerial communications network) The operation of COMCAR (costs are a charge to portfolio departments); and payment of salaries and allowances of ministerial staff employed under the Members of Parliament (Staff) Act 1984.
MS has offices in Canberra, the ministerial wing of Parliament House and the capital city of each State and the Northern Territory.

Parliamentary Departments are (proposed to be) responsible for electorate office accommodation and office requisites for the minister and electorate staff, and computer and other training for electorate staff.

Portfolio Departments

A minister’s department is responsible for the costs of official cars, including any private plated vehicle in Canberra, for the minister and spouse; additional furniture and equipment, (including computer equipment), for the minister’s offices both in the ministerial wing and in the Minister’s home State or Territory; salary and other costs of a departmental liaison officer; stationery and office requisites for the Parliament House office, separate ministerial office in the capital city and a joint ministerial/electorate office; relief arrangements for personal staff absences of less than 12 weeks; postage for use in relation to ministerial duties; and the costs of official residential telephone and fax services and telephone charge cards for the minister. Portfolio-related hospitality overseas; official hospitality within Australia (including when a staff member represents the minister); mobile telephones for the minister and staff; membership fees of business organisations related to portfolio or ministerial functional responsibilities; the provision of semi-official residential telephone services and telephone charge cards for senior ministerial staff nominated by the minister; and payment of conference and training fees for ministerial staff, as well as any membership of airline lounges.

Parliamentary Departments

The parliamentary departments are (proposed to be) responsible for: payment of the senator or member’s salary and electorate allowance; the standard issue of facilities and equipment in the ministerial suite in Parliament House, namely telephones, two computers linked to the Parliament House network and a facsimile machine; electorate office accommodation and office requisites for the minister and electorate staff; and computer and other training for electorate staff.

Protective Security Coordination Centre

The Protective Security Coordination Centre, Attorney-General’s Department, is responsible for personal security, residential security and security of personnel in offices outside Parliament House.
9. Ministerial Staff Conduct

Ministers (and parliamentary secretaries) are responsible for the conduct of members of their staff (including consultants), who act at the minister’s direction and, to the extent that they have the minister’s authorisation, take action on his or her behalf. For this reason, the rules of conduct applying to members of staff are in many respects similar to those applying to ministers.

Further advice on matters covered below is available in the handbook, Ministerial Staff Entitlements, produced by MAPS in the Department of Finance and Administration.

Members of staff must divest themselves, or relinquish control, of sensitive interests such as shares or similar interests in any company or business involved in the area of their ministers’ portfolio responsibilities. The transfer of interests to a spouse or dependent family member or to a nominee or trust is not an acceptable form of divestment. Staff may transfer control to an outside professional nominee or trust providing the staff member or immediate family exercises no control on the operation of the nominee or trust.

Like ministers, members of staff should take care to avoid conflicts of interests if they make investments on the stock markets or other financial and trading markets.

A member of staff must have no involvement in any outside employment or in the daily work of any business, and must not retain any directorship in a company, without the express agreement of the employing minister.

Members of staff should not contribute to the activities of interest groups or bodies involved in lobbying the government, if there is any possibility that a conflict of interests or the appearance of such a conflict may arise. They are required to disclose membership of professional and recreational associations where any conflict or the appearance of a conflict of interests may arise.

At the time of commencing their employment, ministerial consultants and members of ministers’ staff (including electorate officers) are required to complete statements of private interests on forms supplied by MS. The employing minister endorses the statement in writing after satisfying him or herself that there is no conflict of interests. The signed and endorsed statement is retained in the minister’s office. Access should be strictly limited, and when a statement is updated or when a person ceases to be employed by a minister, the earlier statement should be destroyed.

The MS handbook sets out circumstances in which members of staff may be obliged to declare that they or their ministers have an interest in a matter under consideration.
Gifts including hospitality

Gifts, sponsored travel or hospitality should not be accepted if acceptance could give rise to a conflict of interests or the appearance of such a conflict. All gifts, sponsored travel or hospitality with an estimated value of more than $50 must be disclosed through updating of statements of private interests within 28 days of receipt.

Expenses incurred by staff

On some occasions a member of staff may incur hospitality expenses at the minister’s direction. Any claim for reimbursement should be endorsed by the minister indicating that the staff member was acting as directed and in accordance with the hospitality guidelines.

10. Parliamentary Business

Parliamentary Questions

There are two kinds of parliamentary questions requiring written answers. Questions on notice which appear on the Notice Paper printed each day Parliament is sitting; and further information on a question without notice.

Questions on Notice

The Parliamentary Questions Officer in each department examines the Notice Papers each day Parliament is sitting for new questions asked of ministers. A draft response is then submitted to the minister for clearance. Once cleared, it is returned to the department where it is processed for lodging with the relevant Table Office.

Time constraints

Each house has set time limits for management of answers to questions on notice. House of Representatives standing order 150 (is proposed to be amended to) provide that a member who has not received an answer to a question on notice within 35 calendar days may seek an explanation from the minister for the delay, and may repeat such request each three sitting days until an answer is provided, and move that the House take note of the explanation  Senate Standing Order 74 (is proposed to be amended to) allows a senator who has not received an answer to a question on notice within 35 calendar days to seek an explanation from the minister for the delay, repeated after each three sitting days until an answer is provided, and move that the Senate take note of the explanation.

Irrespective of such limits, it is in the interest of ministers to respond to questions in a timely manner, and for answers to cover particular points raised in the questions, so that the need for follow-up questions is minimised.

Questions without Notice

Questions asked at question time are to be answered fully by ministers except where the Prime Minister or Government Leader in the Senate declares the answer would require the disclosure of the deliberations of Cabinet or matters endangering the administration of justice or national security. In fully answering a question, a minister must be directly responsive, relevant, succinct and limited to the subject matter of the question.

From time to time, a minister may undertake to provide further information. This undertaking is regarded as taking the question (whether in part or in whole) ‘on notice’. The minister may provide the further information or answer by letter to the member/senator concerned (a response conveyed in this way will not appear in Hansard); or by having it delivered to the Clerk in accordance with the normal question on notice process (a response conveyed in this way will appear in Hansard); or by leave at the end of question time or at another early opportunity (the response will automatically be recorded in Hansard; in the Senate it is also possible to seek leave to have the answer incorporated).

Corrections

Any answer found to be incorrect should be corrected as soon as the error is found, using the procedures of the chamber concerned.

More detailed information relating to Parliamentary questions can be found in the House of Representatives Practice, 3rd edition, pp 499-525 and Australian Senate Practice, 8th edition, pp468-482.
Legislation Process

Legislation is often required to give effect to policy changes. Ministers should, at an early stage, give clear instructions to their department on the policy direction, bearing in mind that Cabinet approval is required for major policy issues, and the Prime Minister’s approval is to be sought for matters with minor policy implications. Ministers should give authority to the department for the necessary legislation to be drafted; when legislation impacts on other portfolios, initiate consultation with relevant ministers throughout the development of the legislation, and take their views into account; when legislation amends Acts for which other ministers are responsible, seek the formal agreement of the relevant minister to the policy and text of the amendments. Ministers should allow adequate time to clear the legislation, the explanatory memorandum and the second reading speech before introduction into Parliament; take into account the general practice that a bill is introduced in one sitting for debate in the next; and whenever possible, be present in the chamber to guide the legislation through the various stages of debate.

The minister should be present in the chamber during the debate of his/her bill. If the minister’s absence at the time of the debate is unavoidable, the minister should ensure that a duty minister or a parliamentary secretary is sufficiently briefed on the detail of the legislation in order to guide the bill through the Parliament in the minister’s stead.

As there is likely to be pressure on the legislation programme, it is important that ministers develop a forward plan of legislation for their portfolio and allocate the appropriate priority to bills they wish to have included on the programme for a particular sittings. More detailed information on the procedures and process involved in the preparation of legislation programmes can be found in the Legislation Handbook issued by the Department of the Prime Minister and Cabinet.

In order to facilitate effective management of the legislation programme, ministers should nominate a senior member of his/her office as a legislation contact officer to liaise with his/her department and with the Parliamentary Liaison Officer in both chambers to ensure ministers’ priorities for the preparation and debate of legislation are adequately taken into account, and to assist the orderly presentation and flow of legislation.

Parliamentary Committee Inquiries

Parliamentary committee inquiries form an important, integral part of the Australian system of parliamentary democracy and accordingly are treated with respect.

Ministers are to make all reasonable efforts to meet the request of a committee for information which the committee deems to be relevant to an Inquiry, including facilitating the appearance of public servants, other employees and contractors of the Commonwealth, and ministerial staff. Personnel may be advised that they are not obliged to offer opinion on policy decisions but are required to furnish factual information within their knowledge or for which they have administrative responsibility.

11. Ministerial Correspondence

As a matter of routine, ministers receive correspondence from other ministers, Premiers, federal members of parliament and senators, State and Territory members of parliament, constituents, organisations, political groups and the general public, including children.

It is open to ministers to determine how they prefer to have their ministerial correspondence handled. For example, ministers might decide that mail received from their constituents would be handled differently from mail received from the general public. It is not possible or desirable in most portfolios for ministers to answer all correspondence personally.

Some general points of principle in handling ministerial correspondence are people who write to ministers expect a reply, however brief; correspondence should be handled expeditiously and, where a timely reply is not possible, an interim acknowledgment giving reasons for the delay should be sent; replies should contain an expression of genuine appreciation of the correspondence and make specific reference, however minimal, to at least some of the key points or issues raised; and replies should be signed by someone at an appropriate level.

It would be normal for departments to have in place procedures for the handling of ministerial correspondence. Ministers should consult with their departments at an early stage to indicate any personal preferences they might have in the handling of ministerial correspondence.

12. Overseas Travel

Ministers may need to travel overseas for a variety of reasons, for example to undertake negotiations and discussions with overseas counterparts, to put Australia’s view at international meetings, to represent Australia on significant occasions and to gain first hand experience in areas of relevance to Australia.

The Prime Minister is responsible for approval of official overseas travel by all ministers, their spouses and their staff. He writes to ministers, normally twice a year, asking for advice about travel proposed over the following twelve months. If a proposal receives his approval in principle, it is placed on the programme of visits for the year and the minister is advised to write seeking confirmation of his approval three weeks before the date of departure. Guidance on making travel arrangements is available from MS in the Department of Finance and Administration.

In developing proposals, ministers should take the following into account. Proposals should include only the highest priority visits, where the purpose of the visit and involvement at ministerial level can be clearly and publicly demonstrated as essential. The duration of absences and the costs of visits should be kept to a minimum; priorities should be set and visits minimised through consultation within and across portfolios. Wherever possible, ministers who regularly attend international meetings should tie their other essential travel in with these meetings and absences should be planned around parliamentary sitting periods, Cabinet and other (e.g. Budget) commitments. Where there is more than one minister in a portfolio, no more than one should be absent overseas at any one time.

Ministers are entitled to be accompanied by their spouses during official visits. The government will meet the cost of fares, accommodation and meal expenses incurred by spouses during official visits.

Ministers are on duty full-time when travelling overseas, although their itineraries may include rest days if a minister is accompanied overseas by children or any family member other than the spouse, it must be at the minister’s own expense and the presence of others should not be allowed to interfere with the minister’s capacity to attend to business; ministers may request approval to take leave while overseas, but the period on leave must not be excessive and the visit must be clearly defensible in terms of the official business undertaken. All costs associated with a minister’s leave are to be met by the minister.

Ministers are normally entitled to be accompanied by one staff member during official visits. Additional staff support is rarely required.

13. Post Ministerial or Parliamentary Secretary Career

It is a condition of appointment that, for a period of five years after ceasing to hold appointment as a minister or parliamentary secretary, he or she may not accept any substantial benefit (e.g. employment, a directorship, provision of services pursuant to a contractual relationship, gift or other relationship) with any person or entity which was subject to any regulatory, contractual or other relationship with any government entity There has been a perception of impropriety where holders of ministerial office have accepted lucrative employment or directorships shortly after leaving office. This is especially concerning where the corporation benefited from dealings with the minister, parliamentary secretary or his/her department. It is important to remove the potential for perceptions that favourable treatment of a business could have been in anticipation of any form of benefit or reward. A five year “cooling off” period will ensure that it is much less likely that either party would be party to such an arrangement.
for which he or she had responsibility; or in relation to lobbying of the government or any other body for the exercise of government discretion, legislative authority or the allocation of public resources.

Appendix

Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards (UK)

The Commissioner’s main responsibilities are:

Overseeing the maintenance and monitoring the operation of the Register of Members’ Interests

Providing advice on a confidential basis to individual Members and to the Select Committee on Standards and Privileges about the interpretation of the Code of Conduct and Guide to the Rules relating to the Conduct of Members.

Preparing guidance and providing training for Members on matters of conduct, propriety and ethics.

Monitoring the operation of the Code of Conduct and Guide to the Rules and, where appropriate, proposing possible modifications of it to the Committee.

15 Approaches taken in other jurisdictions vary and were surveyed in Ian Holland (2002) ‘Post-separation Employment of Ministers’ Department of the Parliamentary Library available at http://www.aph.gov.au/Library/pubs/mr/2001-02/02rn40.htm and Deirdre McKeown, (2006) ‘A survey of codes of conduct in Australian and selected overseas parliaments’ Department of the Parliamentary Library available at http://www.aph.gov.au/library/intguide/POL/conduct.htm. For example, where a Code approach is taken and bans imposed on related employment, it will be found that there is a general ban of two years in South Australia and a permanent ban prohibiting the changing of sides in the USA and Canada.

16 A five-year ban on lobbying is provided for in legislation recently introduced into the Canadian Parliament as part of the new Harper Government’s election policy program (The Federal Accountability Act (Canada) (Bill C-2) 2006).
Receiving and investigating complaints about Members who are allegedly in breach of the Code of Conduct and Guide to the Rules, and reporting his findings to the Committee.
